LEGEND

JAN. 1939

WEEQUAHIC HIGH SCHOOL

NEWARK, N.J.

Foreword

• It is our earnest desire that we may someday have the opportunity to look back upon Weequahic as the foundation for our success in life. We feel that we owe much of our ideals, training, and education to our teachers who have so carefully guided us these past four years. We want them to know that we realize and deeply appreciate their efforts. We can never adequately express what they have meant to us.

GLORIA ZINKOFF.

Dedication

WE, the class of January 1939, dedicate this volume of THE LEGEND to Miss Helen Johnston, our class advisor. Her earnestness, good humor, and genuine interest have helped us immeasurably. She has a high place in our esteem and will always be in our memory.

To The Class

May you join hands with comrades whose eyes look toward the light, toward goals forever worthy,
toward paths both straight and right.

HELEN JOHNSTON.

Principal

To The Graduates of January 1939:

You are going out this month into a sadly troubled world, a world of turmoil, dictators and other pests, unemployment, doubt. You are going to be the ones who will help repair the damage your elders have caused and try to build something better. Good luck to you in a tough job!

In Memoriam

It is with much sorrow and regret that the graduating class of January 1939 goes on without one of its best-loved members,

Amelia Blaszczyzyn

"Death lies on her like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field."

—Shakespeare.

ROBERT WARNER

"In every deed of mischief he had a heart to resolve, a head to contrive, and a hand to execute."

The Old Family Album

When I turn the ageless pages,
Of a book I love to see,
There the pictures that I look at,
Bring back memories to me.
First there's mother—young and pretty,
As she looked in days of old,
She was the beauty of our county,
Many's the time that I've been told.
Next there's father, straight and solemn,
As he stands so stiffly there,
His eyes stare straight ahead of him,
And his right hand grips the chair.
Then there is dear Aunt Mabel,
Who is always filled with worry.
She's a nervous, high strung, soul,
Who's always in a hurry.
Now I turn the next few pages,
Time is going fast for me,
But I know when you're with memories,
The reins of time are free.
Then we come to Uncle Tommy,
Who's the family black-sheep now,
He is in and out of trouble,
But I love him anyhow.
He may not have had much money,
And yet he knew how to live,
But the great fault of Uncle Tommy,
Was to take and not to give.
And then comes my little cousin,
Who is ten years old today.
Auntie says he's tempermental,
So he always gets his way.
Now I close the family album
Till again some rainy day,
When I let my memories wander
To the days of far away.

Class Prophecy

● We stood there looking at the gleaming apparatus, a time machine, in the laboratory of Professor Silberfeld, the well-known physicist. Its conglomeration of knobs, levers, dials, and other gadgets impressed us greatly. The professor attempted to explain the function of his invention and requested an opportunity to exhibit its miraculous abilities. Since we were anxious to discover the fate of our high school classmates, he consented to show us.

A lever was pulled, wheels spun, lights flashed; in the midst of silence there came before our eyes, telecast on the view plate, a galaxy of the illustrious graduates of the class of January 1939. As the cavalcade began, we observed: Adrienne Hassel and Tessie Rudnick, instructors of physical education, at Herzberg University, winking at Milton Podolsky and Melvin Ortnier, also gymnasts. Down the hall we see the violent gestures of Isadore Yablonsky arguing with Joel Wallenstein over the advantages of Latin as compared with Trigonometry. Observed in a nearby room is Mlle. Gloria Estelle Zinkoff instructing her music class. Across the hall Barbara Gohd is coaching a few pupils in baby talk for the next dramatic production. The view plate becomes blank . . . spasmodic flashes of light, a buzzing sound, and then another picture is projected on the screen. It is a large room with a massive table in the center, around which are seated many prominent men. On close scrutiny we recognize a few of our former classmates. Conducting the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce is that capable financier, Harold Feinman. At his right sits Seymour Frieland, lingerie manufacturer. To his left Phil Caris, Gerson Abramson and Morton Weinstein are disputing on that profound subject of whether chewing gum can be rechewed after remaining on the bed post over night. Sputter, sputter, flash, flash . . . A street scene? It's getting clearer, is that Thelma Gast on a soap box? She is gesticulating wildly to the enthusiastic members of the proletariat crowding around her perch. Now she is introducing the next speaker who is Abe Berkowitz. Crackle, snap, pop . . . A court room scene, on the bench dressed in black robes sits Norman Dintenfass thoughtfully pondering. The prosecuting attorney, Lester Gerber, faces with a set, determined look the jury. His Client, a man of resource and keen business acumen, is our old friend Murray Waton, a pharmacist. He has been obliged to bring suit against Sherwood Barnhard, a member of the dental profession, for non-payment of drug supplies. The dentist has for his defense the famous criminal lawyer, Robert Warner. Just as Counselor Warner rises to object, the scene fades. A sudden flash of light again and we have a peaceful bridge table. Seated around it are Eve Horey, Frances Feitlinger, Alice Kristal and Claire Weil. The conversation centers around Claire's many children, Eve's twins and Frances' Pekingese. Alice, as usual, is playing the part of the good listener, while the rest of the group goes on to discuss Judith Orleans' marionette show, which has been touring the world. Eve and Claire make a tentative date to attend it with their offspring. The former Ruth Finkelsteins, J. and L., now society matrons, have just entered the room with Ellie Freeman, a famous dietician. Miss Freeman has been engaged to plan menus for the Doris Westman country home, which is open in the winter for the unemployed.

A grinding noise, a thud, light, darkness then light again. Above the staccato of the typewriters we hear the imperative orders of Sylvia Schwartzstein, head secretary to Jack Steinberg, president of Steinberg, Steinberg, Steinberg, Steinberg and Sons, Inc., Engineers. At one side of the room, Rheta Jacobs, Claire and Adele Shane are hard at work . . . , gossiping about the latest flame, while Fern Fishman is artfully applying lipstick, and Evelyn Savel operates the switchboard. The twelve o'clock whistle blows and out stroll many hungry stenogs. Our scene ends, ends thus in an empty office. A loud crash—Professor Silberfeld frantically reaches for a dial, all is quiet again and we now see the Metropolitan Adult School. In the student body we recognize many of the Weequahic alumni. Jacqueline Maltz is instructing a cooking class for inexperienced wives, among whom we see Helen Dobrin and Dorothea Robey, an eminent pianist. The topic for today is egg nogs, and their place in the world's nourishment. In an adjacent class room Bernyce Slavin, the Pulitzer Prize Play Winner, is giving a lecture to her Creative Writing Class. Among the hopeful aspirants are Seymour Tabatchnick and Michael Cermele, that scintillating singer of popular tunes. Elaine Geltzeiler though pretending interest in the lecture, is conversing with Esther Harris about a party given by Gertrude Lieber, the modern dance exponent, and Vera Kovar, a popular commercial artist. The party was in honor of Connie Buechler and Ruth Skolnik, who just returned from abroad.

We the authors would like to remind you there are more flashes, buzzes, etc. There, lying prostrate in a bed at the Gelwarg Memorial Hospital, is the matinee idol Morton Gross. He is recuperating from a strenuous season before the footlights. Dr. Wilbur Weiss is standing over him with that very becoming professional poise. The patient is fortunate in having for his nurse the efficient Margaret Klima. In the nearby laboratory we see Norman Lieb, pharmacist, and Charles Bierman in earnest discussion over a chemical problem. They are in a horrible dilemma as they have just invented a liquid which dissolves everything it touches and they can't find a container for it.

We were startled. The metal monster emitted a loud blast and quivered violently. We watched in amazement as the professor's creation sank into a heap. Fate had intervened and stopped our brief preview into the Future.

ATHLETICS

Senior Girl Athletes

Tessie Rudnick—One of the best and most popular of the girl sportsters; an all-around athlete—a great asset to the hockey team, an outstanding forward on the basketball team, and an important aid in badminton and archery. Tessie was also gym captain and has received a "W."

Adrienne Hassel—Known for her outstanding gym work; proved herself an able gym captain; earned a "W"; was active in hockey, basketball, and swimming.

Dorothea Robey—"Dotty" was among the better sportswomen; has participated in the following sports: Basketball, hockey, tennis, and badminton. She has received a "W" and an athletic pin.

Claire Shane—Claire was outstanding as a gym captain, in badminton, and basketball. She has received an athletic pin as well as a "W."

Adele Shane—Adele has received a "W" for her excellent gym work, her participation in many sports and her good work as a gym captain.

Rheta Jacobs—Known as the sport fiend, due mostly to her ability as a hockey and basketball player. She also excelled in swimming and earned a "W."

Helene Lighter—One of our most capable girl athletes, Helene has received a "W" and has taken part in a number of girls' sports.

Irene Norko—Received a "W" for her able gym work. She was one of our tennis and badminton stars.

Harriet Horowitz—Another badminton star. She has earned a "W" for her ability as a gym captain, plus her activity in several sports.

Sylvia Schwartzstein—The adage of "Jack of all trades, but master of none" doesn't fit Sylvia—she's an all-around girl, has received a "W" for her gym work.

Mary Svetez—Was an outstanding sportswoman, an able gym captain, and has received a "W."

Ruth Skolnik—Ruth proved to be a very able participant in hockey, basketball, badminton, and golf.

Jeanette Waldman—One of our leading mermaids and a basketball and hockey player.

Athletic Honor Roll

● The highest graduation honors for sports go to the following:

In Football, Milton Podolsky and Martin Freedman for superior work on the line; Lester Eagle and Seymour Pfefferstein who have been outstanding in the Indian backfield as passers, winners, and blockers.

A "Gold Medal" in Basketball goes to Seymour Frieland whose excellent playing will be lost to the team.

On the Diamond, an exceptional pitcher is now joining the ranks of his "forefathers"; we mean Lester Eagle. Noteworthy as outfielders are Martin Friedman and Irving Cohen.

Graduating cum laude in track is Bill Barret, star pole vaulter who, besides being city champion and tied for the state crown, was captain of the team. In high hurdles, too, Bill won many a point.

Sheldon Grossbart won his letter in the pole vault and was junior city champion in that same sport, while Richard Schneider received honors in the high hurdle events.

Little Emery Steinberger led a successful Weequahic squad in the cross country races. He himself ran the mile with much vim and vigor.

The tribe will miss these warriors greatly, for they have brought fame and trophies into the wigwam on the hill.

EDITORIAL

• After four years of accredited study in Weequahic it is time for us to leave for other things. Some of us look forward to the continuation of our academic education, others are looking forward to making contact with the business world. All of us are looking backward on hazy days spent in Weequahic. We did have happy days: classrooms and studies, clubs and activities, games and "school spirit." Until now we have not understood the feeling of leaving high school: it is such a big and important step. It altogether determines our futures. Now having reached the time when we must leave, we are doing so with regret, realization, hope, and trepidation. Behind us we leave others who must now, as seniors, carry Weequahic's name; and we wish them all the good fortune we would wish ourselves!

HELEN KAPLAN.

The Ancient Senior

Listen little Freshman
And I will tell,
What every senior
Knows full well.
Take heed little Freshman
And you will know,
Which road to take,
Which way to go.
Now don't you laugh
And don't you sass,
For it's he who knows
Who laughs the last.
Cheat not little Freshman
Don't hesitate,

To take the right road,
Ere it's too late.
Glide not through your lessons
Try not to shirk,
For you will find
What counts is work.
Don't cut your classes
Your parents will know.
How?—you see little Freshie
Report cards will show.
Take advice from a senior,
Take the path with weeds strewn,
And I know little Freshman,
You'll reach the top soon.

MARCIA GUTTERMAN.

Reflections

And now we've reached
The terminus
And try to recollect,
Perhaps
With a sigh,
The years preceding
Those Senior terms.
In retrospect—
We burst into
These halls as Freshman,
Too innocent for words.
Yet now, O how changed!
From hence the Struggle onward to
The Supercilious Sophomore.
Here nothing cramped
Our Ego:
It went rampant.
No longer time to be spent
At homework and such,
When instead, our energies
Were devoted to Styles,
Slander and related
Stuff.
From there our
Perilous journey
Through the semesters
Took us to the Junior year.
Just a bit more Serious.
That's all.
And then we cast
An envious eye
Up to those
Seniors Supreme on high

At last through years
Of toil
We too had reached
The goal where Individualistic
Taste could be expressed;
And especial exemption
Reign.
And now the span,
Approximately complete;
We are the toast of Weequahic High
On the eve of Graduation night.
And now as we have
Retrospected,
Let us give
A thought to Posterity.
Who can say
What chance will Bring us
Or whom
Fate has chosen?
Neither you
Nor I.
So let us keep that
Weequahic spirit
And as we go about
Through life
Continue hoping,
And though the Veil may
Ponderous grow,
Push it
Aside
And see the Light.

CHARLES BIERMAN.

Sorry

● The clerk's pen moved over his casualty books at a seemingly inhuman rate. Yet, try as he would, he could not attain the speed of the reader seated across the aisle.

"Go slower!" he suddenly shouted. "I'm not a typewriter."

"All right," was the reluctant reply. And again the verbal stream began.

"Number 1782—Drake, L.—killed in Mesopotamia—survivor: mother—sorry.

"Number 1783—Stern, V.—Marne—parents—sorry.

"Number 1784—Green, H.—Verdun—brother—sorry.

The reader's gaze turned from the book. He mopped his brow and stared with glazed eyes into the distance as if a different world lay there. Dribblets of smoke floated from his mouth to the ceiling. Then in a dry voice which came from far away, he began to speak again.

"Interesting case, this 1784," he said . . . A fly, seen but unfelt, crossed over his hand toward a nearby candle . . .

"Harold was only a kid—eighteen, I think. But they took him anyway. He could lug a gun and that was enough for them. More than enough, it seems, because first shot they sent him to Verdun. Fritz was weakening around Fort Ducaumont, you'll remember, and the French were taking full advantage of the situation. At that time there were as many as three attacks a day and the soil was yellow with rotting flesh. The same night that Harold arrived a new drive was to begin. About a quarter-to-eleven—"

"But," interrupted the clerk.

"Do you want to hear the rest?" he asked impatiently.

"Yes, but—"

"Then please keep quiet." He resumed as if there had been no interruption—resumed with ironical shadows dancing on his face to the unsteady candle rays. "About a quarter-to-eleven the barrage began. Ten minutes later it changed to a 'hurricane' with all guns popping as one. The singing clack of the machine guns could hardly be heard above the din of 12 and 16 shells. But they were visible if not audible, whizzing in a continuous stream over the French trenches. Just the same—bullets or no bullets—they sent the kids over at eleven, Harold among them." . . . His eyes followed the fly carefully while he spoke . . .

"As their heads popped into the enemy's view they were cut clean from their owners by cartridge streams. I can see them now—heads falling backwards into the trenches, bodies forward into nowhere. And I can begin to realize why most of the men refused to continue the attack. Harold, though, went ahead. He had too much guts to turn back . . ." The fly was crawling over the narrator's desk. It seemed to chart its path with the swirl of the wood grain but always its tacking led it nearer to the leaping flame.

"Somehow, he got over the top into no man's land without being decapitated. Crawling from hole to hole, he approached the German line. Then he turned in search of his comrades. There were none. All had fallen back to safer spots.

"In the distance he saw his trench, sprawling like a snake over hill and gully and spewing dead men at its silvered lip. It was a fascinating sight—so much so that he stood up to see it better. An exploding shell revealed his body against the sky and a moment later a hundred sights were on him." . . . The little creature came right up to the candle's base. Its scaly wings shot forth colors in response to the unsteady light . . .

"That boy met death out there under the gleaming Verey lights and roaring shells. There must have been a strange, gripping beauty in the scene but Harold couldn't appreciate it—cold and still with his head buried in a filthy puddle." . . . The narrator shook his desk vengefully and smiled as drops of burning tallow pinned the fly to the table. For a moment he chuckled at the torture. Then, like all murderers, like the makers of Harold's war, bowed his head in regret . . .

"But there were millions of cases like that," the clerk said. "One more or less isn't very important. Anyway, how did you learn all this?"

"It's of interest to me," the narrator answered. "You see, he was my brother."

For a moment it was very still. The unimportant fly had stopped moving. Then the monotone resumed.

"Number 1785—Stone, L.—Poland—child—sorry.

"Number 1786—Prince, E.—Marne—mother—sorry—sorry—sorry."

ALBERT TEICHNER.

Utopia

● They came in throngs. Strangely silent thousands filled the docks and poured down the leading thoroughfare. With increasing curiosity the natives watched men of every nation, creed and class arrive. American students, Russian peasants, English cockneys, cultured Germans, Swedes and French aristocracy united by a common purpose.

There were many that carried scars of the war that had raged for five years, leaving all nations defeated. The continent of Australia had been ceded to the peoples of the world to be had for the taking. It was rumored that the idealistic immigrants intended to make this haven of sunshine and rolling hills their Utopia.

A radiant faced matron began to sing. It was a stirring song of emancipation, and one by one the whole unburdened procession took up the chant, miraculously in harmony—perfect harmony.

THELMA GAST.

Fallacy on "An Apple a Day Keeps the Doctor Away"

● As it is noted, apples play quite a part in our present civilization. Reader, try to imagine what would happen if Sir Isaac Newton hadn't seen an apple fall from a tree. Why perhaps no one would have discovered the Law of Gravitation. Possibly, some of you do not see this point so I'll illustrate it: Without doubt, there would be a good many ignorant people, and possibly some of us who would not believe in gravitation at all or, for that matter, know what it means. Therefore, imagine our high death rate being ten times as high, made so by people trying to fly, climb flag poles, etc. . . .

And then there was that infamous apple in the Garden of Eden. If it had not been eaten, we today would probably be playing there, running through the orchards and gardens and picking daisies, but certainly not in any event would we be here in the city, in school.

But these are all would have beens. Let us get down to the drastic realities that can harm our civilization today in the event of an extremely large apple crop.

I'll wager that not many of you know that our delicious, wholesome apples have been sprayed with poison, yes, with poison. This is done while they are still on the trees and for the purpose of killing insect pests. After they are picked and washed, whether you know it or not, about one gram of poison remains on the apple, usually around the stem. Now one gram isn't enough to kill you or even give you a stomach ache, but one apple a day, every day in the year, year in and year out, including all the leap years, will absolutely result in a physical disorder of some sort and what horrors you and all your family and friends might suffer and can suffer.

Therefore, take caution, dear reader, and believe me that the well-known maxim can be easily, rightfully, and justly changed to this:

"An apple a day
Will bring the doctor some day,
And they'll take you away."

Explanation:—What is Petunia?

● Petunia is a flower like Begonia, Begonia is a sausage. A sausage and battery is crime. Cats crime trees. Trees a crowd. The rooster crowd in the morning. It made a lot of noise. Noise is what you have between your eyes. Eyes is the opposite of naves. Wake up with a cold in your naves and get double Petunia.

WILLIAM SEGAL.

The Phoenix

● The phoenix flew slowly over the vast, impassive plain, settling near a clump of scrubby bushes. Resolutely she began to break off little twigs from the bushes and set them in a pile. She built the pyre calmly, as though not aware that she was being hunted.

Michael walked along the path of the forest slowly, more slowly than the phoenix had flown, for he was thinking of something. He had been told that if he could find the bird, pluck a feather from its tail, as proof that he had found it, and return to the village, his name would be remembered forever. He wanted to be remembered, and the necessary deed seemed easy enough to accomplish. Besides, hadn't he even dreamed how he would find the phoenix? At the edge of this forest there was a great plain. When he came to the plain, he must walk in the direction of the setting sun. If he kept in that direction, he would come upon the bird building a nest of twigs. That was his dream, and he couldn't help but wonder at the perfect clearness of his mind-picture. As he was thinking of this vision, he saw a little bypath leading off into a different part of the forest, and knowing that he had plenty of time, he followed the bypath, intending to retrace his steps and continue his journey a little later. He had not proceeded very far when he suddenly stopped, for not three yards away from him, in a little clearing, stood a bird. It seemed to be the bird he had seen in his dreams. True, it was a little smaller, and darker in color than the vision but that must be because of the poor light in this place. The bird had those spots on its tail that resembled eyes, he could never mistake that identification. Well, the phoenix had met him halfway. He chuckled at that thought. He could not take any chances on losing his prize now that he had found it, so seizing a stone, he threw it at the bird, hitting it full in the breast. The bird fell dead without even uttering a cry. He pulled out one of its tail feathers and then quickly left the place, forsaking the lifeless bird.

The phoenix knew that the man was searching for her, but she was not disturbed. In fact, she expected that men would seek her, for men had created her many years before, and after her escape from captivity, had spent their lives attempting to capture her. When men found her, as they often had, they did not keep her but took only a feather from her tail, feeling that that was as valuable as complete possession of her. Even while Michael was walking thru the forest, the phoenix fanned a mysterious fire, which had begun to take hold in the pile of twigs, with her wing. When the flames reached out between the wooden tracery of the funeral pyre and leaped into the open air, she flew above it and settled in the midst of the blaze. In a short time there remained only a mound of ashes where the bird and the twigs had been.

As Michael strode homeward he examined the feather carefully. While he turned it about in the sun, the whole feather, even to the great blue eye, shone like burnished metal. He felt that the luster of his prize would be transferred to his own life and that very thing came to pass, for when he returned home, the villagers praised him for his deed and he became a leading citizen, much admired and envied. There was only one dissenter in the ranks of admirers. An old man, who had encouraged him to search for the phoenix, said, "Alas Michael, you have not found the phoenix. That which you possess is simply the feather of a peacock."

As the feather grew older, it accumulated dust. Michael's fame seemed to share the same fate, for although people still respected him, they did not mention his name as often as before, and many people had become interested in a young boy who had just arrived in the village. The youth owned a feather which everyone regarded as the tailfeather of a phoenix and he was a clever, likeable fellow. Michael aged day by day and the feather shone less and less.

Michael lay on his deathbed. The boy of promise had reached the end of life. As his spirit left his body and death poured into him, he had a strange dream. He dreamed of a great plain. On a part of the plain lay a heap of ashes. From the midst of the ashes a great bird arose. It circled over the mound awhile and then flew slowly away until it was lost in the brilliant glow of the setting sun.

Chaos is King

Chaos rules this earth,
And on it is no light, no joys.
All is darkness, gloom,
Sorrow hovers everywhere.
Kingdoms fall; dictators rise;
Wars break out. Peace is made;
To what avail? Who knows,
For today Chaos rules.
Through the ages
Man has fought his brothers.
Why?
Because to fight is far more easy
Than to think.
I have no solution,
For this World is dim
Perhaps some day, one wiser than I
May know the answer, but until then
Chaos is King.

GERTRUDE LIEBER.

What is in a Name?

● "Why, my dear, fancy seeing you here!" I turned at the sound of the familiar high, sugar-coated voice and beheld a modern finished product of Pierre's Beauty Salon.

"Jean, how are you my dear?" I asked as soon as I recognized the features of an old friend.

I was spending my vacation at a secluded mountain resort when this affectionate meeting took place.

Time passed quickly while confidences were exchanged between my companion and myself.

It was during lunch that Jean inquired about Betty, an old friend, whom she had not seen for a long time.

I told Jean, in my inimitable way, how Betty was situated socially and economically.

When I first met the model, she was known as Betty Worth. When Betty began to pose she determined to make something of herself, and she did.

It was not only her beauty, but also her brains that made the mannikin become better paid, and known as Elizabeth Worth. This young lady a common model? No, indeed!

Striving to get ahead, she was soon known from coast to coast as Elizabeth Worthington. Oh, yes, she was getting ahead. I would often see her dining at the Biltmore, surrounded by a group of wealthy gentlemen. All wealthy gentlemen.

One day I received the shock of my young life when I saw her glide past in a limousine. It belonged to her.

And when she was interviewed by the breezy gentlemen of the press, after winning the nation-wide model contest, she was "Miss Elizabeth Worthington of the Virginia Worthingtons."

Quite a clever buildup of her name, don't you think?

Hmm . . . I wonder . . . my name now . . .

The Village Motorist

(Apologies to Henry Wadsworth Longfellow)

Under a spreading chestnut tree
A stubborn auto stands.
The Smith, an angry man is he,
With trouble on his hands.
The carburetor seems to be
The cause for all his woe;
He tightens half a dozen bolts,
But still it doesn't go.
He sits beside the road to give
His brain a chance to cool,
And ponders on his training
At the correspondence school.
And then he starts his job once more,
And just by chance it's seen
The cause of all his trouble is,
He's out of gasoline.

Senior Prom

● Ship Ahoy!!! The sea-worthy vessel "S.S. January '39" lifted anchor at "Chancellor Slip" in "Weequahic Bay" on December 16, 1938 at eight bells, more or less. (8:30 P.M. to landlubbers.) From portside to starboard the passengers together with the entire crew, including the Admiral and the superior officers, were aboard in gay spirits.

These prefatory remarks do not relate to a Mediterranean Cruise, or an excursion to the South Sea Isles, or even to a trip around the world. I did not expect to make the illusion as exciting as that. If the introduction succeeded in giving that impression it started with a false PROMise. I must therefore dispel this inaccurate prospect PROMptly. It was just the Seniors coming to their Promenade.

The eagerness of the Seniors to attend was indicated by the rush for reservations. The passenger list was long, which is not hard to understand. This was the farewell dance, their "last sail together."

Weequahic High School
Dear Miss Johnston,

I received the very interesting invitation to THE SENIOR PROM to be held Friday, Dec. 16. Inasmuch as we expect to start south Dec. 14 I will not have the pleasure of being with you on Friday.

You and the class have my best wishes for a happy evening. Please convey to the class of January 1939 my best wishes for success to each member during January to be followed by a happy and useful life after graduation.

Very sincerely yours,

WALTER WHITE.

Man and Nature

The turbulent sea
With its tumultuous waves,
Struggling madly to reach the shore—
Then what?
They break and are forgotten.
The agitated student
With his scheming mind,
Striving hard to make the goal—
Then what?
Success and achievement.
That's where man and nature differ!

Roller Coaster

● Shut your eyes my senior sophisticates and 'neath those blase lids see again that maze of lively memories which slowly clears and then runs along excitedly in roller coaster fashion. At the first sweeping upgrade a group of overenthused freshmen gasp. The first downward leap was burdensome homework with time out to climb again to the heights of ecstasy at their first football game to the tune of the "bestest band what am." Then that sophomore love affair that was the real McCoy. That junior philosophy of life in a nut shell and finally that nostalgia for carefree days that were almost gone. The teachers that inspired lofty ideals, those that lulled us gently to sleep, and those that brought us abruptly back to earth with a caustic remark about late hours and a dreamy yes. Up and down, ever moving for four years that might well have been four minutes on a dizzy ride.

And on the easier swerves, the constant companionship in peril (test, etc.) and giddy fun ripened into friendships that clung more closely together at each heart-sickening downward leap. And the crowd of teachers below, gesticulating wildly at our antics finally breathe a sign of relief. For the same fate that enticed us into buying tickets only gives us our last short months to sit back and take the now slight jerks with a smile. Now the machine is slowing down just long enough to collect our stubs of information and to give us time to choose lots for our passes to the next entertainment in the amusement park they call "Life."

GERTRUDE ANKER.

Ambition

She knows she has no claim
To beauty or to fame,
Nor does she hope to be
A dweller in eternity.
But she'll gladly sell her soul,
To be a square peg in a square hole.
He knows he has no claim
To an immortal name,
Nor does he hope to be
Creator of a symphony.
But Sir, let me tell you!
He'd speed through hell and heaven too
If he were sure it was his goal
To be a square peg in a square hole.
